Haberlandt s Physiologische Pflanzenanatomie is made the basis of the work, but, in addition, lectures and demonstrations are given by the instructor and members of the class and frequent use is made of original monographs on plant anatomy. in. The History of Botany. Professor Johnson. Two lectures weekly from November 1 to February 1. The following themes will be discussed in alternate years: The Theory of Sex in Plants; The Cell Theory. These courses present, in historical sequence, the development of our knowledge of the two aspects of botany mentioned, as an aid to a just appreciation of the problems and significance of modern research in those fields. III. Plant Physiology The work in Plant Physiology is planned to inculcate productive habits of thinking and of experimental analysis in regard to the various processes of plants, and aims to fit students for either purely scientific investigation or practical research. It is essentially advanced work, but no rigid system of prerequisites in academic courses has been established. Opportunity is furnished for three kinds of work which are essential stages in the development of ability in research, of appreciation of physiological principles and of the application of the latter, (a) A year s course of lectures, conferences and prescribed laboratory experiments, the latter terminating in some practice with simple experimental problems and naturally leading directly to research, is planned to give a somewhat broad and general view of the entire subject of plant physiology as so far...
