T, that rather held it better men should perish one by one, Than that earth should stand at gaze like Joshua s moon in Ajalon1 Not in vain the distance beacons. Forward, forward, let us range. Let the great world spin forever down the ringing grooves of change. Through the shadow of the globe we sweep into the younger day; Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay. III. I THE FUTURE OF THE RACES. Having shown that there are diverse races, or species of mankind, and that the mingling of these distinct species inevitably leads to social decay and national suicide, it may not be amiss to glance at a possible, nay, a certain, future, wherein the great question, as to the proper relation of these different races to each other, shall be correctly solved. Poets have dreamed of a Utopia, in which men emancipated from their burdens were to enjoy the full fruition of their faculties. The philosopher, the political economist, and the philanthropist, have all suggested schemes intended to accomplish this long-looked-for and desired result. Fourier thought he had struck the key-note of human longings when he presented his beautiful theory of social science. Thousands of true lovers of humanity became deeply imbued with his sentiments. We have not lacked sincere and genuine philanthropists in this age of the world so much as intelligent ones, and it is; no more than justice to say that the noblest and...
